I'm trying to make a Twitter search in android. The only problem is that it was very slow and i've had to check if there was something wrong. The problem is that is a very slow response. The search uses the so-called "Search API" And the fact that it's a http method, it gives a ok for which to receive the response. My problem is that i can not understand how to validate if the response contains the keywords i'm looking for... The problem is that since it uses a http request, i receive the response as an object, and with android i can not understand how to handle the data. The search API returns a string, but as the twitter api returns different objects depending on the type of request and the search, i can not figure out how to handle the values. i'm very interested in how to validate the response. Thanks in advance :) A: just send a GET request to twitter api directly and see what status code you get, if it's 200 it's good or not. and just like @Haralord said, you could use the twitter4j library. UPDATE : public int search(String query){ AsyncTwitterApi api = new AsyncTwitterApi("twitter_key_or_id", "twitter_secret_key",
